

Liberal Arts Division Changes —————

By Erich Heinlein

Liberal Arts has divided into two different divisions. One half has become the Humanities Division, focusing on art-related subjects such as literature, art and humanities, while the other half has become Social & Behavioral Sciences. This newly created division includes classes like psychology and sociology.

According to Dr. Catanzaro, it will not affect students, and it is a more manageable way to utilize department personnel. The majority of the department heads and administrative positions have remained the same.

Dr. Donald Andrews has returned as the Interim Dean of Humanities, while Dr. Fannie Hewlett, who is also a psychologist, heads the new Social & Behavioral Sciences Division. The staff of the Communicator would like to wish the new divisions good luck in the upcoming year.
